The West is Coming Back

In the western wheat belt twelve hundred long-lie elevators are being cleaned out, repaired, remodelled, fitted with new equipment, and going ready to receive and forward grain when threshing time comes. For five years, in some cases for six years, these elevators have stood empty, unmanned and useless, mute witnesses to the devastating drought, monuments to unproductive capital, dead hopes, wasted labor and time and seed. Now 7,000 men will put them in condition to resume the functions for which they were built.

That tells the story of the change the year has brought to the west. Crops are growing where none have grown for half a decade. Farmers who have reaped nothing for years will have grain to haul to market. The crop, it is estimated, is now quite certain to total more than 311,000,000 bushels; how much more will depend on the weather, which governs both plant growth and the extent of damage by disease and insects.

As the unused elevators are being reconditioned at a cost of $3,000,000; as thousands of box cars are also being reconditioned in the railway yards after carrying little or nothing for a half-dozen seasons. All told there are 5,678 grain elevators in the prairie provinces. They will all be needed this fall. The west is coming back.

The Visit to Paris

The King and Queen did not of course go to France just to make a social visit to President Lebrun. The journey had political significance. It—and the welcome accorded them—betokens the close relations between the two democracies, and is intended to strengthen on both sides of the channel the sense of their interdependence.

These two alone of the larger countries in Europe enjoy popular government. They are for the time only two which want that kind of government or profess to believe in it. The others have placed themselves, or been placed, under dictators of one type or another.

Unfortunately, the dictators are not all content to rule their own subjects and leave other countries to rule themselves. The Berlin-Home alliance, written or unwritten, is a reality, and an alliance for aggression. Ethiopia and Austria are the first prizes of the joint program of conquest. Neither France nor Britain can afford to ignore the impact of their selves and their imperial possessions. And both, fortunately for themselves and the world, are conscious that the common danger can only be countered by standing together.

But they stand together for defence only, not for conquest or interference with other nations. Every government in the world knows that, and every unprejudiced student of world affairs. No country has any cause to look with apprehension on the enthusiastic welcome extended to the King and Queen in France. Every country had cause to look with doubt, if not with actual suspicion and positive dread, on the reception given to Hitler in Rome. That is the difference between the known and recognized aims and purposes of the "entente" and the "axis".

On the Move

Regina had a brief repetition of the recent Vancouver episode when a party of 125 transient unemployed men marched into the post office there, took possession, and said they would stay until they got food or jobs. They did not have to stay long. The acting mayor rose to the occasion and promised they would get meals at the restaurants, and they vacated the premises the same day. There was no disorder, or threat of disorder. On the contrary, the "campers" stated they did not desire to inconvenience anyone and acted accordingly. Where they came from is not stated in the despatch. There is room to suppose they drifted across the mountains from the Coast, and were a contingent of the larger body which employed similar tactics in the terminal city.

From Kamloops comes word that 250 of the Vancouver "sit-downers" have arrived there, tired from riding on the top of box cars, but not in destitute circumstances. The British Columbia Government has arranged to give each man $8.10 relief money every ten days—provided he keeps moving about the province looking for work. If the arrangement is unusual, it has the advantage of making further camping in public buildings unnecessary so long as the men remain in that province, and also solves for them and the public the question of how they can eat without begging. And it does look a more promising way to get idle men at work than to pay them relief for remaining in one centre, where because of their numbers they are least likely to find work.

Wherever the Regina transients came from, the moral of their presence there is the same as that of the presence of the men at Kamloops. The transients are on the move. Whether they do not know; but they are moving. That is a point which counsels in the prairie centres and governments of the prairie provinces should take note of.

Editorial Notes

Toronto papers, Premier Hepburn says, think he is going north to start a third party. Aiming to round up the Eskimo voters perhaps, and capitalize on the Indians' disappointment at the fur catch.

Anyone who wants to go to London from New York will soon be able to do so for $150, the price of a ticket good on a Trans-Atlantic airliner. Those not in such a hurry can make the trip more comfortably on a steamship for a quarter of the money or less. The surface liners, it is to be surmised, will continue to do business for a while yet.

Here's a hair of one day that bit the Edmonton taxpayer in his young and foolish days. An Ottawa despatch relates in mournful numbers that "Thousands of wooden blocks used for paving street car track allowances on several Ottawa streets were loosened and washed away by one-third of an inch of rain which fell in an hour." Edmonton, to its sorrow, knows all about that habit of the wooden paving block. It got adrift and got cruising down the gutter. Forbid that we should take satisfaction in knowing Ottawa taxpayers have been also "stung". But—well, human nature is human nature, and misery likes company.

Old Country Letter

By J. E. NORCROSS

LONDON, Eng.—(By Mail)—A story obtained widely recently to the effect that when, shortly before the war, the Kaiser's brother, Prince Henry of Prussia, visited England, he asked King George V whether Great Britain would be neutral in the event of a war in the affirmative.

This was never believed in this country but it furnished a text for the counter-assertion of the German press. It has now been refuted in the columns of a Berlin journal.

Dr. Kurt Jäger, archivist to the House of Hohenzollern, the full text of Prince Henry's letter to the Kaiser at that time is quoted. From this and from subsequent declarations made by the Prince and attested by Dr. Jäger, it is clear that he received no such pledge.

King George went no further than to express the determination, with which his ministers were in perfect agreement, to do everything possible to avoid being drawn into the threatened conflict.

His Majesty, of course, was too strong an adherent to constitutional practice to have given "the word of a King" for Britain's unconditional neutrality.

The Kaiser and the German authorities were not misled by the British Sovereign in 1914.

One cannot help wondering how Mrs. Betty Ann Sharples is going to like it when she has settled down with her daughter, Mrs. Annie Fish, and her grandson, in a lonely lighthouse on the Gulf of Georgia about nine miles from the coast from Vancouver, of which the grandson is the keeper.

Mrs. Sharples is 81 years of age and has hitherto lived in a Lancashire manufacturing town. One can imagine few contrasts greater than the view of amble-begrimed mill chimneys which she has had to leave.

And that of the broad Gulf with the mountains of Vancouver Island rising beyond the blue waters.

Mrs. Sharples, however, may not miss the friendly neighbors who probably three-fourths of her life has never seen. Incidentally, she is a lady to be admired.

Mrs. Annie Fish, who has lived in the lighthouse for 32 years, being widowed, came over here two years ago from a small town in Scotland. She found living quite alone and eventually persuaded to return with her to the Pacific Coast.

They sailed a day or two ago on the Duchess of Bedford.

Your Health

DR. FRANK MCCOY

The fungus which causes Athlete's Foot is commonly found on the floors of gymnasiums and locker rooms, on the floors of showers and in the runways around swimming pools. The disease is picked up by walking through such places in bare, moist feet. As may be guessed from the name, the disease is most common among those who are athletic and it is therefore found most frequently among young adults.

Athlete's Foot is a exceedingly common among University students and probably three-fourths of the male students either now have, or have already had, this disorder. Seemingly, men are more likely to be affected than are women.

Athlete's Foot is considered highly contagious and the danger of one member of the family spreading the infection to other members has been repeatedly pointed out. The fact that the contagious factor has been somewhat over-emphasized and that in this form of ringworm the individual plays some part in warding off the infection. Those having a high resistance seem to be immune to ringworm of the foot, but athletes have a low resistance and are easy to pick up the parasite readily. The safest rule to follow is for the other members of the family to protect themselves when using the same bath-tub or shower as the one who has the skin disorder.

Some of the common symptoms of the disease are itching, smarting, scaling, cracking, and thickening of the skin, and the formation of cracks and fissures. The parts under the toes are most likely to be involved. The one chief complaint is the itching. The itching is relieved if these parts will give off a characteristic odor, which is very unpleasant.

Sometimes as the result of too enthusiastic treatment, considerable swelling of the toes may result. As a general rule, the condition will tend to grow worse rather than better when no treatment is given, although a few cases may be exceptions to this rule, where the affected patches cleared up spontaneously without any treatment being used.

The standard treatment for Athlete's Foot consists in the application of some preparation designed to kill the fungi. It must be remembered that ringworm is a contagious disease and is entirely possible, and the patient should be instructed to change to clean hose and a different pair of shoes. All hose should be boiled for five minutes, and wooden hose sent to the cleaners. If find it a good plan to instruct men patients to wear white cotton hose which will stand boiling. Quicker and easier to do is to use a disinfectant in causing the formation of clean, healthy skin and destroying the fungi.

Once the treatment is started, it must be kept up until the toes are cured for the present. If one has a small, unhealed patch which starts the trouble all over again.

As you use a shower where you think there is a possibility of picking up Athlete's Foot, protect yourself by folding a thick towel and standing on it while under the water. Then step out of the shower as in a clean newspaper.

True goodness is like the glow-worm in this, that it shines most when no eye except those of heaven are upon it.—C. H. Gore.

What Kings Talk About

It is creditably reported that the kings of Denmark and Sweden, while driving along the coast of Denmark or Sweden was the more beautiful. The King of Denmark gave his vote for Denmark; and the King of Sweden replied that he quite agreed with the verdict. The courtiers were a little shocked, till he added, after a due pause: "It is more beautiful because one can see from the coast of Sweden."—London Spectator.

The Two-Party System

Canada, as Sir Thomas White said in his admirable Ottawa address last week, has made excellent progress under the two-party system. It is one of the, on the whole, has produced general satisfaction. It is not perfect, but no system is perfect. By and large it provides this country with a reasonably efficient and thoroughly workable machine for carrying on public affairs.

All of us are inclined to grumble at times, to wish for this and wish for that, to deplore the anachronistic pace with which Parliament proceeds, the jangles that go on, the deadlocks that arise. When we look around, however, and study the political uncertainties obtaining in so many other lands, we are apt to conclude that Canada is doing a pretty satisfactory job in a parliamentary way and that the two-party system is not to be lightly exchanged for something else.

At the moment, of course, there are more than two party groups in the Canadian parliament, but only the two traditional, major parties have a sufficient number of members to say any thing—Windsor Star.

Our Trade With France

The total value of the trade of France with Canada in 1937 amounted to $64,614,000 francs ($26,584,400), as compared with 40,700,000 francs ($23,812,200) in 1936 and 43,152,000 francs ($27,480,000) in 1935. Credit is a Manion, assistant commercial attaché at Paris, in the current issue of the Commercial Intelligence Review.

The increase in francs over the previous year amounted to 63 per cent, but in dollars it was only 11.8 per cent.

Of the total trade value, imports accounted for $25,725,000 francs ($12,100,400) in 1937, as against $21,533,000 francs ($10,760,000) in 1936, and $21,100,000 francs ($10,760,000) in 1935.

The balance of trade remains favorable to Canada, exports of French goods to the Dominion being valued at $18,028,000 francs ($8,824,000) as against $18,557,000 francs ($9,151,000) in the previous year; in both years, therefore, Canada's trade with France was almost four times as great as her purchases from France.

France's imports from Canada of commodities other than wheat were valued at $1,575,380 in 1937 as against $1,575,380 in 1936, and $1,575,380 in 1935. The reduction of 8.3 per cent. Imports of wheat, however, increased in value from $6,284,700 to $9,432,400 and accounted for 37 per cent of the total value of imports of all commodities.

Together with wheat, the following seven items made up 88 per cent of the total value of imports from Canada last year: wheat ($1,575,380); wool ($1,575,380); cotton ($1,575,380); sugar ($1,575,380); paper ($1,575,380); wood-pulp ($1,575,380); and other commodities ($1,575,380). All other commodities accounted for 12 per cent of the total value of imports.

The total value of exports from France to Canada in 1937 was $18,028,000 francs ($8,824,000), as against $18,557,000 francs ($9,151,000) in 1936 and $18,557,000 francs ($9,151,000) in 1935. French exports have remained at a stable figure for the last three years and represent slightly more than 37 per cent of the value of imports from Canada. The most important items exported to Canada are: spirits, mostly brandies, $4,240,000; paper of good quality, $3,770,000; petroleum and its products, $3,200,000; raw hides and skins, $3,240,000; and wines, $3,220,000.

The remaining two-thirds of exports from France was made up of thirty-four different items. Only one of these, silk and rayon, made up more than 10 per cent of the total, amounting in value to $424,000.

Nowadays the churches are complaining about the failure of parents to send their children to Sunday school, or, perhaps, at the refusal of the children to do as they are told. A century ago it was far different. This date in 1838 was the second anniversary of the founding of the first Sunday school in Canada, at Toronto.

And, despite the poor means of communication and the lack of day schools in many sections, the officials were able to report that in practically every Protestant church in Upper Canada the children were being taught the catechism in their two and threes, to be taught the catechism and the Scriptures.

The first Sunday school in Canada was at St. Paul's church, Halifax, in 1785; the first in Lower Canada that of St. Mary's church, Montreal, in 1804; and that of St. George's church, Quebec in 1795, founded by Prince Edward (afterward the Duke of Kent), first Marquis of Milford, and the Duke of York, in 1804.

These are Anglican dates. Those for the Methodist and Presbyterian churches will be found to be coincident with the foundation of the first missions, for the circuit riders saw to it that the children of the new settlers were given the basics, they must transmit to their children the same religious training they themselves had learned in Scotland or Ireland. School on Sunday was for a time a common feature of the early Methodist settlers on the Red River, and westward also as the pioneers moved west.

It was on July 21, 1885, that T. H. Hayhurst of Hamilton, speaking at Windward, on the Queen's park, "red riband" of rifle shooting, was first resident of the Red River, and Englishman. His son, T. E. Hayhurst, of Windsor, Ont., who has followed in his father's footsteps, endeavored to do what has never before been done, the capture of the royal trophy by father and son.

A Vicious Circle

Editor, Bulletin: "Action" is the human bodyguard. "Brevity" is the soul's ally. I hereby heartily endorse the underlying sentiment in Arthur J. Barton's letter of 8th inst. The "interest" question is certainly "a vicious circle" and the real issue is "what is to be done about it?"

The answer for real action has come, more windy talk must come. The answer will come in the form of a bank account, realize that they are adding the pernicious traffic, the answer will come in the form of a bank account, realize that they are adding the pernicious traffic, the answer will come in the form of a bank account, realize that they are adding the pernicious traffic.

For four years this has been publicly advertised in Edmonton and elsewhere a "New Order" and "New Basis of Values", with which the writer wholeheartedly concurs, and considers to be the practical answer to the "vicious circle" that a change of system is necessary. The "vicious circle" is a term very rarely from the "Bartor" (Bartor) to "Man" versus the "System" of all commercial "Ultra Vires".

Incidentally the courts in deciding certain pieces of Alberta legislation to be "ultra vires" have served on the government a "vicious circle" act, which the writer will prove when the time comes. Let the old man who does "ultra vires" or "interest upon money" as the writer would say, be the "vicious circle" act, which the writer will prove when the time comes. INTERNE TROUBLE

By ELLINORE COWAN STONE

CHAPTER XI
THAN had started awake that morning thinking, "This is the day!"

It was to have been the culmination of the dream of almost two years. For today she was to help in one of Dr. Stephen Sargent's operations.

True, she had worked under several of the other surgeons before—but that was not the same.

Now, scrubbed and sterilized, in operating gown and cap, rubber gloves and mask, she was to take part at last in the antiphonal chant which she had rehearsed alone with a pair of stencils that day, almost two years ago, before the shining case in the instrument room. . . . Just was the first time Bob Bentley had kissed her. Oh, well.

Today it would be very different. "Scalpel" Dr. Sargent would snap. And nurse Dearborn would slap a knife into his hand with the crisp echo, "Scalpel!" "Retractor!" "Haemostat!" "Sponge!" "Forceps!" But not nurse this time. Tran knew that sutures were handled only by graduate nurses.

In honor of the occasion, Tran had had a shampoo, a finger-wave and a manicure. Not that anyone would know the difference, but it was a feeling of being fit and clean and ready, like a prestidigitator, cleaning rings before a sacrifice. . . . Beula Taze, who was at the hospital, scandalized Tran by refusing to sleep instead of last night. But then Beula was only to be "dirty nurse," which means that her job was to pick up messy things that the scrubbed nurses mustn't touch.

Tran's mood of exaltation had been momentarily jarred as she hurried along a corridor that morning by the sight of Dr. Bentley and his pretty widow coming together from one of the private rooms. . . . The charming Mrs. Bentland seemed to have a number of friends who were patients these days.

Something intimately possessive in the way she rested a hand on Bob's sleeve and laughed up into his face surprised Tran into a sudden unreasoning fury of resentment.

She reminded herself with a shrug, "Well, I could have what I'd like, couldn't I? I've got what I did want, haven't I?"

But just then Mrs. Bentland turned and called over her shoulder with the exaggerated precautions of one who makes a rule of being always kind to inferiors. "Nurse, won't you have them call my car as you pass the office? I'm in rather a hurry."

"So sorry, but I'm not going that way," Tran answered with what she hoped was just the right touch of tolerant amusement to point the difference between a busy professional woman and a mere social butterfly, "and I'm in rather a hurry myself. Nurses, you know, are slaves to the clock."

Young Dr. Bentley glanced twice from one to the other with a manner at first startled; then, as his eyes came to rest on Tran, fairly amazed.

Congratulating himself on his happy escape Tran thought, "Well, he's not the only one." The catastrophe came shortly after the operation was over. Toward the end, a violent wind and electrical storm had blown up. Even the severely beautiful Miss Miller, who was handling the sutures, glanced up apprehensively once or twice when small objects hurled by the windows of stucco cracked in the hashed room with each blinding flash of lightning.

When it was over, and the gas had been wheeled away, only Dr. Sargent, Miss Miller and Tran remained—Miss Miller because Dr. Sargent had detained her; Tran, because there were still things she had to do.

Moving about between the instrument table and the service room, Tran heard Miss Miller say, "Congratulations, Doctor. No one but you could have done that. He'll live, don't you think?"

She heard Trip Sarge reply a little wearily, "And what, in God's name, has the poor devil to live for? . . . This is the kind of case that makes a surgeon feel like a criminal."

"But the operation was successful." "The operation? . . . Is that all you ever think of, Katherine? After a patient, a human being, you know?"

Tran didn't mean to listen, but she seemed to have forgotten her. They were standing together by a window, against a background of waving trees and daisies; rain—standing with the look of two who instinctively drew together, yet in the final resolution were left always apart.

Miss Miller, low, even voice said something else that Tran did not catch, and Dr. Sargent answered almost bitterly, "Yes, and even surgeons are sometimes human beings, Katherine. . . . You wouldn't like that, would you? You like fresh and blood markets, always blood to the highest efficiency, I often wonder—"

It was then that the rending crash came. A splintered bulk of tree trunk and wet leaves hurtled through the heavy window pane, and shattered glass fell in every direction.

Miss Miller cried out in a voice not her own, "Stephen—your arm!"

Dr. Sargent just stood, his left hand clasped above his right elbow, while blood spouted from a deep cut below.

hands working feebly as she applied a tourniquet and dispatched Tran to summon a doctor.

Meantime, Stephen Sargent sat with a face like granite, his eyes on the fingers of the right hand which had performed so many daring miracles—fingers that now hung lax and helpless, and would not move, no matter how hard he tried to flex them.

When Miss Miller said in her clear, even voice, "As soon as the shock wears off, the nerve will come to life," he only lifted blank eyes and said with bitter amusement, "Your brains technique is as perfect as ever, Miss Miller."

Just then Dr. Bentley hurried in with a fresh nurse, and Miss Miller turned and walked with her erect, high step out of the room. It was a moment before Tran followed.

When she did go into the service room beyond, Katherine Miller, "the icicle," stood, leaning against a cupboard door, her face buried against her bent arm. But body wreathed with sobs.

"His arm," she was moaning. "Oh, no, I couldn't bear that."

In another year he would have been famous. People would have been coming to Saint Vincent's from all over the country.

"Famous?" Saint Vincent's said. "You can't bear it?" Tran snapped before she could remember in blue her cheeks. "And what about him? If he can't operate any more, it will kill him—won't it? Why don't you try thinking about him for a change?"

Miss Miller whirled upon her, her blue eyes blazing through tears. "You little fool!" the cry. "What else would I be thinking about?"

"Then for heaven's sake," Tran said, "let him do something about it. Let him see how you feel. You're the only one who can do him any good now."

"But I—I can't." Amazingly the correct Miss Miller was crying out in the thin, high voice of a frightened child. "He's so—I'm afraid."

"Why should you be afraid of him if I'm not?" Tran demanded. "He's crazy about you. Any one with eyes can see that. If he hasn't told you, it's probably because he thinks like a lot of other people around here—that you're not quite human. . . . You can't blame him for that. You've been acting like a frozen plaster saint. . . . For heaven's sake, tell him so now, while you look like you're actually alive, with feelings like the rest of us, so and tell him so now, while you look like it for the first time in your life!"

Amid 'Ticker-Tape Hurricane'

Greets King

Former cigarette girl in a New York night club and more recently member of a London driving troupe, 18-year-old Pauline Spaul was married in 18-year-old Vivian Orlor, son of a famous British banking family, in London recently. Mark Orlor, father of the groom and chairman of Guinness-Whisky firm, is reported to have approved of the marriage.

Riding through the rainstorm of ticker-tape and clucking the hatred but he wore around the world. Howard Hughes, still a little tired after the grueling experience he passed through, waves his hand and flashes a happy smile at the thousands who cheered him from high up in New York's canyon.

Safe After Perilous Passage Down Colorado

Their tiny boats hauled up safely at Lee's Ferry, Ariz., by picture, six adventure-mongers and a collector of rare specimens as well as a set of thrilling tales. The Colorado River Indians, who are pictured in their photo, left in right W. E. Atkins, Louis Jetter, W. S. Gibson, Dan Harris, Dr. Elkins Glover, and Norman D. Nevils.

New Two-Way Prop

Army airmen at Dayton, Ohio, tested the aviation phenomenon shown above, a fighting plane with two propellers operating on a single motor, and declared it a success. The propeller, mounted one behind the other, turns in opposite directions, achieving greater efficiency and smaller propellers.

The stony canyons of New York City echoed the echoes of the crowded streets as thousands of people gathered to see the world's most famous show. Here is the scene that met them as they passed London's old Trinity Church, where Wall Street intersects Broadway. The reception was the greatest since that accorded Charles A. Lindbergh, eleven years ago.

Dancing Duce Bodies Of Fliers Found

While Howard Hughes and four companions break all records on their flight around the world, the bodies of two Spanish aviators lost after a spectacular cross-country five years ago have been found in the state of Mexico. An Indian prospecting in the vicinity of Ixtapalapa, State of Mexico, stumbled across the skeletons of Capt. Mariano Barbacid and Capt. Joaquin Collar, flying under the tattered wreckage of his airplane in which they flew from Seattle, Wash., to Canada. Capt. 4,800 miles without a stop. After a memorable reception in Havana, they took off for Mexico City. They never were heard from again.
